

Interior Alaska's Best Wood Shed Competition

Win A FREE Chainsaw, A Chimney Sweep Or A Log Splitter Rental!

Dry firewood is key to maximizing efficiency and safety and minimizing winter air pollution. Burning dry wood produces more heat because the stove doesn't have to use as much energy to boil the water out of the wood. Creosote buildup is reduced using dry firewood resulting in significantly lowered risk of chimney fires. Using properly seasoned firewood is extremely important in Interior Alaska as it also helps reduce emissions and helps our air stay cleaner as the temperatures drop.

Alaskan summers are the best time to get your firewood ready for winter. Properly storing your split firewood makes a huge difference as to how quickly it dries.

Have a woodshed that you're proud of or need some motivation to build the shed you've always wanted? We are looking for great examples of wood storage ideas people have come up with to either get their wood dried or show their method of keeping their dried firewood stored. Bring in your photo, email it with your name and phone number to info@thewoodway.com or post it on our FaceBook page.
